Metrotown name stays

It's too late and too expensive to change Metrotown's name, mayor Bill Lewarne said last week following a four-week contest to rename Burnaby's future commercial core.

More than 50 suggested names, varying from Kingsbee Square to Rockborough, will be ignored now that brochures describing the Kingsway centre as Metrotown were recently printed and distributed by the Greater Vancouver Regional District.

It will be too costly to change the brochures, worth more than $60,000, plus other maps and materials already printed, Lewarne said.

Disgruntled area residents say Metrotown is a sterile name that does not reflect the charm or history of the district.

Orchard Park was the contest's most popular suggestion.
